In perfect harmony with nature, the banks of the Danube bear witness to a string of prehistoric settlements, Roman and Medieval border fortifications, churches, and cities rich in famous vineyards. Visit to the port of Smederevo and Viminacium (ancient Roman city and military camp).

Danube, the second longest European waterway brings together East and West as it majestically flows through Serbia.

Smederevo is a medieval fortress situated 71 km from Belgrade.

Viminacium first was the camp of the Roman legion VII. CLAUDIA dating from the 1st century A.D. and then became the capital of the Roman province of Moesia Superior. The site, which covers 450 hectares, includes a Roman aqueduct (one of only four and the first to be discovered in the Balkans), a significant legion camp, temples, a theatre and hippodrome, and living quarters. Attila the Hun severely damaged the city in 441, but the city remained in Roman (or Byzantine) hands at least intermittently until the eleventh century when it was permanently lost to the Empire.
